- A. When did people start to study Chemistry?
- B. What do chemists do?
- C. What is Chemistry?
- D. Does Chemistry have many fields?
- E. An opinion of a Chemistry student

11) Chemistry is one of the major branches of science. People who work in chemistry are called chemists. Chemists study the substances that make up matter—everything that takes up space in the universe.

12) In addition, chemists create new substances. They have made plastics, fibers, building materials, medicines, and many other substances that are useful in everyday life.

13) Chemistry is a complex subject with many fields of study. For example, organic chemists deal only with compounds of the element carbon. Physical chemists measure the way that substances change during chemical reactions. Biochemists study chemical processes that happen in living things.

14) People first studied chemistry as a science in the 1600s. In 1661 a British scientist named Robert Boyle described chemical elements as simple, basic substances. In the 1770s a French chemist named Antoine Lavoisier helped to explain chemical reactions.

15) We asked David what he thought about Chemistry. David said he adores Chemistry, because he can make so many experiments. Do you like Chemistry?

Did you know that artist Paul Gauguin worked in a bank until he was 40 years old?

He was born in Paris in 1848 but he spent his childhood in Lima, which is in Peru.

He returned to France when he was seven, but he never forgot Peru and often dreamed of returning there. Gauguin was influenced by folk art and primitive art and kept detail to a minimum in his paintings.

Paul Gauguin became great friends with an artist called Camille Pissarro who taught him all about impressionism. Impressionism is a style of art which artists in France began to use in the late 19th century to paint landscapes and café interiors and people. They used quick brush strokes and dabs of colour to capture the fleeting impression of scenes.

Forget the association of the word "Gothic" to dark, haunted houses, or ghostly pale people wearing black nail polish. The original Gothic style was developed to bring sunshine into people's lives, and especially into their churches.

The Goths were a so-called barbaric tribe who held power in various regions of Europe, between the collapse of the Roman Empire and the establishment of the Holy Roman Empire (so, from roughly the fifth to the eighth century). They were not renowned for great achievements in architecture. As with many art historical terms, "Gothic" came to be applied to a certain architectural style after the fact.

From roughly 1000 to 1400, several significant cathedrals and churches were built, particularly in Britain and France, offering architects and masons a chance to work out ever more complex and daring designs.

The most fundamental element of the Gothic style of architecture is the pointed arch, which was likely borrowed from Islamic architecture that would have been seen in Spain at this time. The pointed arch relieved some of the thrust, and therefore, the stress on other structural elements.

Salvador Dalí made paintings, sculptures and films about the dreams he had. He painted melting clocks and floating eyes, clouds that look like faces and rocks that look like bodies. Weird, right?

Dalí was born in 1904 in Figueres, Spain which is near the Pyrenees Mountains. Surrounded by this landscape as he was growing up, Dalí often included the scenery he saw as a boy in his paintings.

Salvador Dalí was a very eccentric man. He liked to dress in crazy clothes and have long hair which people found very shocking at the time. He was even expelled from art school just before his final exams because he said that none of the teachers were qualified to examine him.

Dalí liked to use lots of different materials to make art, including paint, sculpture and film. He even designed furniture, jewels and scenery for theatre production. He was a man of many talents and he is still seen as a great artist who influences many artists today!

1) Archeology (20 ქულა)

წაიკითხეთ ტექსტი და უპასუხეთ შეკითხვებს/ Read the text and answer the questions

Archaeology is the study of our human past – but it’s so much more than history! And it isn’t just digging and finding things underground either. Archaeology uses a huge range of evidence to help us tell stories about our ancestors and find out about their everyday lives.

Archaeological excavation is the controlled examination of the buried deposits and features that make up archaeological sites and monuments. These are carefully dug and recorded along with the finds they contain, to build up a picture of a site and its people. Archaeology can help us understand past society and how it influences us today.

Environmental archaeology uses techniques from biology and geology to study people’s relationship with their environment in the past. The subject covers how people obtained their food and other necessities as well as the development of agriculture and industry and the impact this had on our environment.

Archaeobotany is the study of ancient plant remains. By studying this material we can find out how people used plants in the past: for food, fuel, medicine, ritual purposes or for building. We can also use plant remains to reconstruct past vegetation and the ways humans interacted with their environment

Scientific dating includes a range of biological and physical methods for assessing the time when things happened in the past. The best known and most often used techniques are radiocarbon dating and dendrochronology, or tree-ring dating.

So archaeology is about answering questions; but it is important to remember that the answers are not always obvious, and in many cases there can be several different answers (or interpretations) using the same evidence. Archaeologists are a bit like detectives. They use the evidence to try to work out the most likely answers and then try to explain why they think their answers are right!

A. Renaissance architects found a harmony between human proportions and buildings. Angels were very common figures used in paintings and works of art during the Renaissance.

B. The majority of Victorian styles use wood siding. Victorian homes often have steep, imposing rooflines with many gables facing in different directions. Some high-end Victorian homes are embellished with a round or octagonal tower with a steep, pointed roof.

C. Baroque architecture is a highly decorative and theatrical style which appeared in Italy in the early 17th century and gradually spread across Europe.

D. The most fundamental element of the Gothic style of architecture is the pointed arch, which was likely borrowed from Islamic architecture that would have been seen in Spain at this time. The ornate stonework that hold the windows—called tracery—became an iconic element of Gothic style, as well.

E. The Romans were the first civilization to fully exploit arched construction, in which a roof is supported by arches. An arch-shaped ceiling is known as a vault. Vaults come in various forms; the simplest is the tunnel vault (aka barrel vault), which can be described as a "continuous arch".
