A. Archway

This 19th century hotel is in a busy area with plenty of restaurants. It was modernised two years ago and now has a fitness centre. Rooms are very comfortable with widescreen TV. There's no restaurant, but you can order decent hot food via reception from the takeaway next door.

B. Windmill

This medium-priced hotel surrounded by artists' studios, lively bars and interesting food shops is right in the middle of the city. The underground station outside will take you anywhere, including the airport within minutes. Help yourself to breakfast from 8 am downstairs, or coffee and rolls can be brought to your room before that.

C. Mars

Hotel Mars is located on one of the main streets, a short walk from tourist attractions, theatres and restaurants. The luxury rooms are beautifully decorated and furnished with antiques. An excellent breakfast is served by waiters in the top-floor restaurant, which also offers spectacular evening views over the city.

D. Hi-Tech

All costs are kept low here. Guests book on the internet, then check in and buy everything they need from machines. Breakfast comes in airline-style boxes. You sleep in a tiny cabin for one and roll up your bed during the day. A fun choice for backpackers, who get together in the lively club next door.

E. Haussman

The wonderful city museum is right next door to this friendly 19th century hotel. The old-fashioned furniture and attractive iron balconies all add to the homely atmosphere. The hotel games room will keep all ages entertained, and there's plenty on offer at the self-service breakfast. Staff are always happy to supply information about what's on.

- E. Killing for fun

1. _____ The magnificent tiger, a symbol of power and beauty, is perhaps the most celebrated Indian wild animal. Tigers have always played an important role in Indian culture, mythology and legends.
2. _____ In the 1700s, tigers were surprisingly common in India; they moved about freely in the forests, around the outskirts of towns, and were even spotted in the city of Mumbai itself. Unfortunately, today the tiger is an endangered species. It is estimated that there are only about 2,000 wild tigers left in the South Asian subcontinent.
3. _____ One reason for the reduction in the number of tigers is hunting. It is hard to believe that people could kill tigers for sport. However, tigers in India were hunted for centuries. During the Moghul Empire (1526 - 1857), tiger hunting was the sport of emperors and the aristocracy. Hunting trips could last for months with thousands of animals, including tigers, being killed. The British in India continued the tradition of tiger hunting. Hunting became a fashionable sport for people from all levels of British society, and with their superior rifles they killed huge numbers of tigers.
4. _____ Jim Corbett was born in Nainital, India, in 1875. As a youngster, he was fascinated by the forests and wildlife of India, and he learnt to hunt when he was still a young boy. As an adult, he became well-known for his skill as a hunter, and he was frequently asked to lead hunting parties of government officials and other “important” people.
5. _____ On one of these hunting trips, Corbett suddenly felt horrified by the pointless killing of so many animals and decided that he would never again kill a wild animal without good reason. From then on, Corbett hunted only tigers that had killed people or their cattle. He came to the conclusion that tigers only become man-eaters if they can no longer hunt the animals they usually eat. This might happen if they are old, sick or injured. Corbett became an active defender of the tiger and its natural habitat.

GRADE 10

Task 1. You are going to read an article about a woman who is a marathon swimmer. Five sentences have been removed from the article. Choose from the sentences A–E the one which fits each gap (1–5).

- A. My mother spent a lot of weekends taking Mike and me to competitions in different towns and cities.
- B. There, the course was set in the rowing basin.
- C. I was three years old when I learnt to swim at our local pool.
- D. Swimmers have even been known to be joined by whales!
- E. I, on the other hand, am much less interested in team sports.

For as long as I can remember, I have been swimming. (1) _____ My brother, Mike, who was then nine, trained five days a week with the local swimming team, so I soon got used to the idea that competitive swimming would be part of my life too.

Mike was excellent at the sprints, the 50-metre and 100-metre races. Joining the world of competitive swimming, I began to realise that, while I didn't have the edge for such bursts of speed, I had plenty of strength and stamina for the 800-metre and 1,500-metre events. (2) _____ When we were scheduled for different competitions on the same day, my father took one of us to the other venue.

Mike managed to get a gold in the national championships, but then he gave up racing for water polo, a move that my father really seemed to approve of. Since then he has obtained a place on the national polo team and taken part in quite a few international tournaments.

(3)_____ I suppose I have simply become accustomed to working on my own, and having to rely on what I can achieve for myself. I was actually making a name for myself in the 1,500-metre freestyle races, where it was becoming rare for me not to finish in one of the first three places. Then one day Daisy, who is my e-pal from Australia, told me that she had become hooked on marathon swimming.

Marathon swimming usually takes place in the sea or in large lakes. One of the most popular races is the 10-km race, but some other distances are 1 mile, 5 km and 10 miles. Marathon swimming has been popular among endurance athletes since the early 1990s, and the 10-km race became an Olympic event at the Beijing Games in 2008. (4) _____ Participants raced one kilometre down one side of the basin, round a marker buoy and a kilometre up the other side, then round the same course another four times.

Daisy warned me that the world of marathon swimming was very different from the swimming that I knew. One of the most obvious differences is the temperature of the sea or a lake compared to a heated pool. Other notable difficulties include waves and currents, seaweed, floating rubbish (imagine swimming along and bumping into a dead dog), fumes from escort boats, jellyfish and other marine life. (5) _____

- A. Their objective is to advise companies of the steps they should take in order to maintain business continuity in the event of disaster.
- B. Maybe safety procedures have got a little out-of-date; it is your employees who can tell you which working practices are dangerous or inadequately supervised
- C. Computer failure, client indecision and even mistakes by staff can quickly send a company into crisis.
- D. The third area to look at is what to do if your office did burn down and all your records were lost.
- E. The advice they offer can be broken down into three areas.

Risky Business

As everyone in business knows, working life can be difficult. At times, it seems impossible to reach a position where everything is running smoothly. (1) _____ Many disasters are completely unforeseen, and it is becoming increasingly important for managers to learn how to live with the unexpected.

After several major disasters in the City of London, a group of managers have got together to form an organization, called Survive. (2) _____ So far they have worked with 600 companies in the UK and they are rapidly branching out to locations around the world. Survive Singapore, which offers its services to companies in the Pacific Rim, is the latest branch of the organisation to be established. (3) _____

Whatever the size of your company is, the basic lessons are the same. Firstly, if you listen to employees and customers, then you are more likely to discover the risks you may be running which you hadn't thought of. (4) _____

Secondly, many companies don't have adequate insurance. In fact, many small companies have very little insurance at all and only discover that they are underinsured when it is too late. A fire may break out in the office and bring damage to not only the office furniture but also invaluable customer records and legal documents.

(5) _____ What you need is a business continuity plan. Professional assistance in drawing up a plan can be provided by Survive, who will give you access to publications, conferences, databases and workshops where you can discuss problems with people in similar situations to yours.
