READING

Task 1: Read the text. Choose the correct answer A, B or C: (10 points)

The fact that most Americans live in urban areas does not necessarily mean that they live in the center of large cities. In fact, more Americans live in the suburbs of large metropolitan areas than in the cities themselves.

The Bureau of the Census thinks that any area with more than 2500 people is an urban area, and does not consider the boundaries of cities and suburbs. According to Bureau, the political boundaries are less significant than social and economic relationships, and the transportation and communication systems. The term used by the Bureau for an integrated metropolis is an MSA (Metropolitan Statistical Area). In general, an MSA is any area that contains a city and its surrounding suburbs and has a total population of 50,000 or more.

At the present time, the Bureau gives information that there are more than 280 MSAs, which together account for 75% of the US population. In addition, the Bureau recognizes eighteen megapolises, that is, continuous neighboring metropolitan areas. One of the most obvious megapolises includes a chain of hundreds of cities and suburbs across ten states on the East Coast, from Massachusetts to Virginia, including Boston, New York, and Washington, D. C. In the Eastern Corridor, as it is called, a population of 45 million inhabitants is concentrated. Another megapolis that is growing rapidly is the California coast, from San Francisco through Los Angeles to San Diego.
