Digital money is becoming more popular every year. People use it to buy clothes, pay for transport, or even send money to family abroad. Unlike cash, it does not need to be carried in a wallet. Instead, it exists online and can be accessed through a phone or computer. This makes life easier, especially for those who travel often.

However, digital money is not always perfect. Some people worry about online fraud and hackers. Others say that when you pay without using physical money, you can lose control of how much you spend. For example, clicking "buy" on a website feels very different from giving a shop assistant real banknotes. Because of this, some people end up spending more than they planned.

Still, many experts believe digital money will become even more common in the future. Banks and companies are developing safer systems, and governments are studying how to make rules for it. In some countries, cash is already disappearing from everyday life. It seems likely that in the coming years, more people will rely on digital payments rather than coins or notes.

- Why might travelers prefer digital money?
  - It can be used without the internet.
  - They can access their money more easily.
  - It cannot be stolen.
- What is one reason people may spend more with digital money?
  - Online shops offer more special offers.
  - When paying digitally, shoppers find it hard to realize how much they spend.
  - Online shopping is addictive.
- Why do governments study digital money?
  - to stop people from using cash
  - to create rules for it
  - to make people rely on real money
- What can we guess about the future of cash in some countries?
  - It might become less important.
  - It will be used more often.
  - It will never change.

5. What is the writer's general opinion about digital money?

- A. It is only dangerous.
- B. It has problems but is growing.
- C. It should be banned.
